Turkey Heralds New Era With Major Gas Find in Black Sea

Fatih, Turkey's first-ever drillship owned by the state-run Turkish Petroleum Corporation (TPAO), set sail from Istanbul for a drilling mission in an exploration zone known as Tuna-1, also known as the Sakarya Exploration Zone, in the Black Sea on May 29, marking the 567th anniversary of the conquest of Istanbul.

Accordingly, Fatih has discovered proven reserves of 320 billion cubic meters of natural gas, with all testing, analyzing, and engineering works already completed – a proof that more discoveries are in the pipeline as part of the first and largest-ever natural gas discovery in Turkey's history.

"This is only a small portion of the vast reserves," said President Erdoğan in his address at the announcement ceremony.

It is Time to Invest in Ideas

The world economy is going through its 3rd big global change. It has been thousands of years since the Agricultural Revolution and hundreds of years since the Industrial Revolution. Countries that were late to adopt to the Industrial Revolution are still striving to enter the league of developed countries. The Digital Revolution creates a brand-new league and opportunities. As the production and consumption habits are changing during this period, companies that were founded only a few 10 years ago reached more than a trillion dollars today, revealing the true nature of this transformation.

The common feature of the companies with the highest worth today is their billion dollars of income not from physical assets but from their digital presence. For instance, the giant online show and movie platform Netflix doesn't even own a movie theatre, digital taxi initiative Uber owns no taxis and accommodation platform Airbnb has no hotel room.
